In Brussels, Ryanair's Michael O'Leary said:

"Ryanair has been a driving force of European integration over the past 30 years, providing young people, and especially students, with the freedom to fly across Europe on the lowest airfares. We are pleased to partner with the Erasmus Student Network, the latest initiative delivered under Year 4 of our "Always Getting Better" programme, which will offer university students across Europe a range of exclusive flight offers, free bags and tailored discounts to suit their budget, and allow them to save even more while they travel on Europe's biggest airline with the widest route network and the lowest fares."

Safi Sabuni, President of the Erasmus Student Network, said:

"The Erasmus Generation is a generation of Europeans that are perennially curious, open-minded and full of wanderlust. This is made possible not only through the success of the European project and initiatives such as Schengen and Erasmus+, but also thanks to companies like Ryanair - without which it would be much harder to travel around Europe. We are very excited about this partnership and look forward to a fruitful collaboration."
